“ I knew Ron for more than half of his life. Throughout that entire time several things remained constant. He had a larger than life personality. A generous spirit that was evident to all who knew him. He viewed life on his own terms and could be quite expressive in relaying those views. In more quieter moments when he could be reflective, he demonstrated a fierceness of resolve and struggle that conveyed he was a man of deep intensity and heart. So many things come to mind as his living chapter closes: his physicality, how he moved, how he spoke with that boisterous drawl, his ready wit, his devotion to his friends, and his forthright generosity. Throughout our time, he spoke of his having been a marine and the exploits that go with that territory with a strong sense of pride and honor typical of those who serve. He was cut from unique cloth without any sense of being burdened with the opinions of others. He was an individual in a world of clones. Though he was not a tall man, he carried himself as though he were a foot or so taller. He was a presence...handsome...sporting differing hairstyles as well as facial hair. His individuality was enhanced with tattoos and piercings which were all harmonious with the man Ron sought to portray. I will miss the goatee...the caps...the attitude...the mannerisms...the charm...the vulnerability of this guy. When I go to David's house, there will be an emptiness around the pool that can never be replaced but will always be remembered...his space...his place. In closing, our views about the eternal had comparisons but differed. I hope his spiritual journey from here takes him to places only dreamed about by those who remain. Ron, you were a good man, and I am diminished with your passing. Semper Fi critter!
