“ Note to Editor of the Guestbook entries:

I left an entry earlier this morning but, after reflecting on the wording, decided I should have used some different words in one sentence, as follows: Where I said "It is my prayer that you become the man God intended you to be", I should have said, ""It is my prayer that you fulfill your destiny here on earth -----" Please make this change if you can edit the text. If not, perhaps you could erase that part of that one sentence. If you can't do that, just don't make the entry into the book.
Sorry for causing you any trouble or extra effort.
Thanks. Isaac Rucker

“ To my talented nephew.

Sorry we couldn't be there but our thoughts and prayers are with you during these days of mourning. Here are a few words to think on that may help you through these difficult times: I'm sure you were thankful for the outpouring of sympathy and support the family received at the reception. You will remember this final sendoff tribute to your father for the remainder of your life. That is good. But, just imagine the reception your father received when he entered Heaven's Gate! One day - hopefully, far out into the future - when you enter that gate, you two can tell each other of these receptions, and of your reception when you enter Heaven's Gate.
And, you need not be in a hurry; you will have an eternity with each other and with all those you know down here that make it through Heaven's Gate.
My prayer for you is that you will be the man God intended you to be down here and to be His vessel - take as many souls with you as possible, as the first verse of a song I recently wrote - says:
"Millions of souls are lost out there, they're blowing in the wind,
Like grains of sand in a desert storm, they'll find some place to land.
If you will be His vessel and help bring these lost souls home,
Christ will give to you a crown some day, when He ascends to his throne.
To rule and reign for ever more, throughout eternity,
If you will help bring these lost souls home, you can rule and reign with me.
Sending our love, I. J. and Fran.

“ When Bill was the manager of the Creamery Factory he graciously let his son Will and myself film an opening for our TV show "Will Jones and the Western Fringe Variety Hour" inside the factory and, after some cajoling from Will, agreed to do a cameo role. That show open played over a thousand times on Cable Access Television and may still be running!
